We Parted.

.Twas by the rustling sallow That droops above the pond; The plow steed in the fa low, On the dusky slope beyond.

We linger'd near the farmhouse door, With fingers fast entwined, While the sinking sun went down before, And the moon raised up beltind:

We stood there in the quiet hour; We could not say "farewell," Our tears dropp'd down on grass and flow'. And glistened where they fell.

Our bitter tears fell fast, we sigh'd, But ne'er a word we said, I v onder if the daisies die On which that dew was shed?

We parted as the crimson light Just faded from the west, When half the sky with stars was bright, And all the world at rest.

Or see the sun together. And if I knew that sun would rise No more upon my sight, How gladly would I close my eyes And say my prayers to night!

We parted-parted-nevermore,

In fair or stormy weather,

To meet again by sea or shore,
